If this statement was made it was court. If this statement was made it was probably in ignorance of the law of the legislative assembly of the District of Columbia of June 26, 1873, that requires you to erect such fences and gates, and that for neglect to de so the railway company is liable to be fined, and that no further permit is needed. THE "CUNNELS" AND "JEDGES." The "Stove Been" Great Statesmen at

Their Old Occupation of "Working" New Congressmen and Casual Visitors. The claw-hooked and brass-armored majors and jedges from that portion of the United States where the southern confederacy was cradled and born have begun to crawl out into the winter, clothed in their summer costumes, to argue and orate on the speakership and other momentous questions. The majors and jedges love the hotel lobbies. This is an historical fact. The reasons for this love are simple. The lobby atmosphore is rearly always heated by means of steam is rearly always heated by means of steam registers, while a barroom is generally within easy range, for reference on a "close call." Some people have declared that the twin "be gawd ssha" do not drink excessively, but are rather moderate. To this a close observer has replied that neither will a horse continue to eat after he has emptied his bin or horse food has been placed in it. The stock of majahs and jedges in this city new is complete, and repleto with red-nosed, argamentative, hald-pated and persistent specimens of the fraternity. And they are modest, too, and as bashiul as maidens—those east in copper and mounted on stone pedestals. The next congress will contain 165 new members, who will gain cords of valuable information, endure the alcoholic breatnings of the titled gentry—and cords of valuable information, endure the al-coholic breathings of the titled gentry—and treat. The roles of military and judicial glory of past generations see before them a prospective pienic much more magnetic to them than a horse race or a fare bank. The drink scheme will be worked "for all its worth" during the heat of the speakership contest, and the congressman who "sets im up" early and often will be voted "a good fel-lah, sah, and a leading statesman, sah."

lah, sah, and a leading statesman, sah."

A well known Georgia colonel made a bad play at an uptown hotel last night. Approaching a new comer, who had the appearance of a new rustic congressman, he tried to hook his long talon-like finger in the strangers of I-want-a-drink manner, "How's the speakership matter to-night?"

"Dunno," replied the stranger, scudding down the lobby, only turning long enough to add in a tantalizing, you-can't-catch-on manner." ner, "guess a speaker will be elected next week."

THE PUBLIC PARKS.

What Has Been Done Toward Embellishing the " Green Squares,"

Col. Rockwell stated to a REPUBLICAN reporter yesterday afternoon that work on the new parks had about closed for the season. The florist will, however, proceed to plant hardy shrubbery and other plants in the new and beautifully designed park which has just been laid off in front of Providence hospita! on Capitol hill; also in Dupont circle, where operations have already commenced. It is Col. Rockwell's intention to ultimately place a handsome fountain and settees in the hospital park. The park improvements about the city hall building have been completed. They consits of turf terraces around the structure, a new road in the northern portion of the inclosure, new walks to Third and Fifth streets, and a great deal of sodding. The fallen autumn leaves, which have been collected in huge piles, are being given away to all applicants for use as bedding for horses and cows. Those retained by the averagement will be converted. retained by the government will be converted into fertilizer and used for protecting the public fountains from snow and ice.

"It is a very difficult matter to decay the leaves for fertilizing purposes," said the colonel. "I have found perfect leaves in an excellent state of preservation which were embedded in the earth by the action of the elements twelve seasons before."

UNDERGROUND TELEPHONES.

The Experiments Making in Subterrene Conductors of Sound

A series of interesting electric experiments will be made at noon to-day from the capitol to Col. Rockwell's office, corner of Seventeenth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest, over the newly laid underground cables, for the purpose of determining the rel-ative merits of the underground cable system as compared with that of poles and arial wires. Telephones and telegraph instruments will be used over a total length of line of forty-two miles. The operations will be witnessed by electricians, newspaper men, and other interested parties. newspaper men, and other interested parties. The underground boxes contain six cables, each of which inclose six copper wires, the latter being insulated by a surrounding rubber composition and imbedded in a 2-inch lead cable with five rounded points. Col. Rockwell tested the forty-two miles of line rectarday comparatively with two and a half miles, and said he found no difference in sound between the two tests. It is his appinion, also, that if the underground system is found to work satisfactorily, it will oventually supersede the old style of unsightly poles.

On Oct. 9, 1830, he was stealing a ride on one of the defendant's trains near Ivy City when he was, as he claims, knocked off the train by one of the company's employes, and received the injury which resulted in the amputation of his lag three times.
